Where we work

What our Community Partners say about the Cure Violence Global model of violence reduction

"I want people to know that this work is not easy. It is dangerous and risky, but our team does it because we love the work, the people we work with, and we really want to change lives and and make a difference. We've had folks decide to leave gangs. We have people who have never accessed services before saying 'I want a counselor, I want to be able to change my life.'"

– Janikqua C., Cure Violence Atlanta

"I'm a mom of four. I have a 20-year-old son who was incarcerated. He's sentenced to 20 years, serving 10. My purpose is to be able to teach these young youth to stop trying to fit in when they were born to stand out. The most important thing that I would like people to know about this work and the approach is that it's trustful, it's resourceful, and it works."

– TK S., Cure Violence Atlanta

"Like everybody else I was skeptical, but I bought in. The first mediation that I ever did was really with myself. When I bought in and really put in the work our first year we dropped our city homicide rate in half."

– David J., Bull City United, Durham NC

"The respect, the rapport, the way that we deal with people as human beings, the way that we understand our communities, led us to over 365 days of no shooting, no killing. When you do it where I'm at, that's when the world takes notice."

– KBain, Community Capacity Development, NYC

The numbers have gone down as far as violence is concerned. I was once part of the problem, but now I'm part of the solution."

– James D., NAARC: Cure the Streets

"This work is so important to me because I also had two brothers that were murdered to gun violence right here in southeast DC on these very same streets. The main thing I want everyone to know is stop the violence, stop gun violence, cure the streets, allow our children to live, allow our babies to grow up, allow the seniors to come out and enjoy their neighborhoods again. Just know that it matters, and you matter."

– Letitia N., NAARC: Cure the Streets
